

The development of a free and accessible internet is the single greatest innovation of our time. Without the spread of new ideas and information there can be no innovation. The internet is the platform through which the sharing of ideas has been based on in the US since the conception of the world wide web.

By privatizing this resource, the FCC will be disenfranchising the millions of American citizens who will not be able to pay the inevitable bloated rates and costs to get access to a platform that should be accessible to everyone.